DEMOCRATS PRE-PAREDNESS CAMPAIGN

The Democratic National Committee has inaugurated what is known as the Preparedness Campaign 1921-24 and invites the co-operation of Democrats throughout the nation. The measure of success of the campaign will depend upon the response it receives in the way of financial contributions from the rank and file of the party.

The Democratic National Committee wishes every Democrat in the country, men and women, to have and to feel an interest in the campaign to restore our party to power, because the committee is working in the interest of the party as a whole and for the general good of our country.

To carry on its Preparedness Campaign effectively the National Committee must have adequate funds. It cannot appeal to the interests enjoying special privileges, as the Republicans do; it cannot ask a few Democrats of large means to bear more than their fair proportion of expense; it must therefore make its appeal direct to the great body of Democrats who make up the party, who give it its victories and control its destiny. You are one of that great body of Democrats. It is your party as much as the party of any other Democrat, rich or poor, or whatever station in life.

It is not necessary to remind Democrats of their duty to their party or their country. It is only necessary on occasions to point out to them the ways and means by which they can perform that duty.

Whatever contributions you are willing to make to the Democratic Preparedness Campaign 1921-24 will be of double value if made now because the great opportunity of the Republican party is in making a record of failure all along the line.

No set amount is asked from any one person, but only such amounts as is within their present means and inclination, large or small. Contributions will be promptly acknowledged.

The time to lay the foundation for success in the next Congressional and the next National Campaign is NOW. Checks and money orders should be made, payable to W. B. Marsh, Treasurer, Democratic National Committee, 441 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

PREPAREDNESS IS ONE-HALF THE BATTLE.

THE SOLDIER'S BONUS

The Republican leaders are very anxious to take the tax off excess profits and at the same time Secretary Mellon complains that they have not enough money to give the ex-soldiers a bonus. Why not keep the excess profit tax and use the proceeds to pay the ex-service men? Those who collect more profits than they should might help the boys who received less pay than they earned.

WHAT DELAYS THE NEWBERRY CASE?

It is three years less than two months since the scandal of the Newberry primary-election campaign fund was brought to the attention of the United States Senate. Senator Kenyon of Iowa then declared, "If this enormous expenditure of money in Senatorial campaigns is to go unchallenged by Congress, then a poor man has no chance ever to secure a seat in this body and simply the rich can purchase a seat here."

For a long time after the election of Truman H. Newberry the Senate refused to consider the contest instituted by Henry Ford. Ever since the Senate was finally compelled to order an investigation the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on one pretext or another, has delayed making a report.

At the trial of Senator Newberry in the United States District Court at Grand Rapids his managers admitted spending over $100,000 in the primary campaign. After the United States Supreme Court, by a vote of 5 to 4, decided that the Corrupt Practices Act was unconstitutional and so saved Senator Newberry from going to the penitentiary, the Senate sub-committee headed by Senator Spencer of Missouri nominally resumed hearings. But at every step here it was sought to present further evidence of corruption, determined opposition was suffered. It was not for lack of further evidence that the session of the subcommittee were suspended many weeks ago.

Sensor Newberry is again in attendance in the Senate, while the investigation into the methods employed in securing his election still hangs in fire. Every day that he appears in the Senate his presence must recall to his colleagues, Republicans and Democrats, the scandal attaching to his name because of the manner of his election. Every time that he votes it must be forced afresh on their attention that the title to his seat is still tainted.

How long does the Senate propose to subject itself to the suspicion of purposely sheltering a Senator publicly charged with purchasing his seat with money? How long does the Senate as a body intend to dishonor itself by dodging an honest decision in the Newberry case?

EXPERTS TO HOLD DEMONSTRATION

Every flock of poultry in Bedford County has hens in it that are not laying. County Agent L. R. Mollenauer of the Bedford County Farm Bureau, has secured the services of L. W. Steelman, Poultry Specialist from the State College Poultry Extension Department, to show how to cull the non-producers.

The methods used are the result of many years' work with trapped birds. A study has been made of the characteristics of good and poor producers. The ease with which the average farmer or his wife may put into practice the methods used and the surprising results obtained when such practices are exercised has made culling a very important part of poultry keeping.

Many hens never lay enough eggs to pay for their feed. Hence by selling only the best producers, poultry profits can be increased greatly. This will reduce the number of hens that must be fed and cared for and at the same time keep the number of eggs at a maximum.

By practicing these methods the hens that have been poor producers are automatically disposed of and at the end of the season there are left only the best hens of the flock. If these hens are mated to cockerels from high producing hens, the flock will be improved from year to year, while on the other hand if all the hens, good, bad and indifferent are kept and hatched from, the quality and productiveness of the flock are sure to be lowered. If poultry keepers learn how to properly cull their flock, more money can be made with fewer hens.

GOVERNOR SMALL OF ILLINOIS AND AIDES INDICTED

Lt. Governor Sterling and Banker Are Charged With State Executive of Embezzlement.

USED STATE'S FUNDS

Springfield, Ill., July 20.—Warrants were issued tonight for Governor Len Small, Lieut. Governor Sterling and Vernon Curtis, Grant Park banker following their indictment this afternoon on charges of embezzlement, conspiracy and confidence games, through the alleged use of interest on state funds for their personal gains.

Four indictments were returned. They covered charges of fraud by the trio during the term of Small and Sterling in the state treasurer's office during 1917-1921.

The first indictment charged them jointly with embezzlement of $700,000. A separate indictment against Governor Small charged him with embezzlement of $700,000. The fourth indictment charges the three with conspiracy and confidence games involving two million dollars interest on state funds.

Alleged illegal operations by the three named in the indictment centered around deposits of state funds with the Grant Park Bank, held by the grand jury to have been a fictitious institution, since 1908 when it ceased to function.

Individual bonds on each indictment were fixed at $50,000.

Governor Small will appear in court tomorrow morning it was said, to arrange his bond.

WESTERN PENITENTIARY BURNS

The Western Penitentiary, of Pittsburgh caught fire on Monday night and many of the apartments were burned. The prisoners were thought to have set the building in order to get a chance to escape. Several Pittsburgh policemen were wounded by bricks hurled by prisoners and several prisoners were wounded, a couple fatally, by the policemen. Only two prisoners escaped and they will be apprehended in a few days. This was the most daring method of escape ever attempted in the United States. The prisoners became frantic when they found their plans failed. Laborers are at work cleaning up bricks and debris for repairs and it won't be long before the convicts will be back to their proper cells again.

JUDGE BAILEY DECIDES LOCAL SCHOOL QUESTION

DISCUSSION, FINDINGS OF FACT, CONCLUSION OF LAW AND DECREE NISI.

This is a tax payer's bill, brought by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and other citizens, praying for a perpetual injunction restraining the school board of the Borough of Bedford from proceeding, in the manner prescribed by law, to determine by a vote of the qualified electors of the Borough whether or not the indebtedness of the school district should be increased to an amount not exceeding $50,000 for the purpose of erecting a high school building. The facts are undisputed.

The total assessed valuation for the territory embraced within the limits of the Borough of Bedford for the year 1921 is $860,159.00. The net indebtedness of the municipality of the Borough of Bedford is $47,700.00. The net indebtedness of the school borough district, which is coextensive in territory with the borough, is $7500.00.

The plaintiff contends that, in calculating and determining the limitation upon the borrowing power of the school district, the debt of the borough and the debt of the district are to be taken collectively. By that method the indebtedness of this territorial district is $55,200.00.

LESSON FOR JULY 24

SAUL PROCLAIMS JESUS AS THE CHRIST.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 9:19b-30.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou art the Christ,
the Son of the living God.—Matt. 16:16.
REFERENCE MATERIAL—Acts 13:
24-28.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Saul Telling Others About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Saul Winning Others to Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Getting Ready for a New Career.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Saul Begins His Ministry.

I. Saul Preaching Christ in Damascus (vv. 19b-22).

After Saul was baptized he remained certain days with the believers in Damascus (v. 19b). How beautiful to think of the transformation which took place!—one who was so passionately bent on the destruction of the disciples was now enjoying fellowship with them.

1. Straightway preaching in the synagogue (v. 20.) Saul, like every one who is really converted, begins to tell of the newly found Savior. Every Christian should be taught that it is his business as soon as saved to help to save others.

2. The people amazed (v. 21). They knew that the very one who had been ringleader in persecuting the Christians in Jerusalem and had come to Damascus for the express purpose of bringing them bound to the chief priests, was now passionately advocating that which he had so vehemently sought to destroy.

3. The Jews confounded (v. 22). Saul retired into Arabia for three years. During this time he was taught the full truth of his mission (Gal. 1:17, 18). Saul increased in spiritual strength and confounded the Jews, proving that Jesus was not only the Son of God, but their Messiah. His proof, no doubt, was by citation from the Old Testament prophecies, showing that the life, death and resurrection of Jesus exactly paralleled them. That Christ died and rose again from the dead, no one then could deny; the transformation of Saul from a hater to an ardent witness was a proof which could not be gainsaid.

II. Saul Escapes From the Jews (vv. 23-25).

He used the Scriptures with such skill that the Jews could not answer him. Finding that the argument was against them, the Jews took counsel how they might destroy Saul. So intent were they upon killing him that they watched the gates of the city day and night that they might take him. When this was known to the disciples they let him down at night in a basket by the wall.

III. Saul Visits Jerusalem (vv. 26-28a).

This journey to Jerusalem was in strange contrast with the one from Jerusalem to Damascus. The one was the leader of an important expedition under the authority of the Jewish officers with the prospect of a place of distinction in the councils of the Jewish nation. Now he is an outcast, disowned by his countrymen, and fleeing for his life.

1. Suspected by the disciples (v. 26). The believers at Jerusalem had not heard fully about Saul's conversion. They knew nothing of his sojourn in Arabia and his preaching at Damascus after his return, so they regarded him as a spy. "Part of the penalty of wrong-doing is the difficulty of restoration in the good opinion of honorable men." But it is infinitely better to be regarded with suspicion when genuinely true than to be trusted as genuine when a hypocrite.

2. Barnabas' confidence in Saul (v. 27). He was a man filled with the Holy Spirit (Acts 11:24); therefore, able to discern the reality of Saul's conversion. He was in reality a "son of consolation," and in this instance showed his kindly spirit.

3. Saul in fellowship with the disciples (v. 28). They went in and out together. Peter received him into his home, since his object in going to Jerusalem was to see Peter (Gal. 1:18). He abode with him 15 days.

4. Saul disputing with the Grecians (v. 29). He was not content to merely visit with the brethren; he spoke boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

IV. Saul Sent to Tarsus (vv. 29b, 30).

A conspiracy similar to the one at Damascus was formed against Saul. When the brethren knew of it they sent him to Tarsus. Saul's life is in danger everywhere except among the Gentiles. He is now back to the place of his birth. The first and best place for one's testimony is in his home.

When in Tribulation.

When thou art in tribulation, and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God and shalt be obedient unto His voice (for the Lord thy God is a merciful God), he will not forsake thee.—Deuteronomy 4:30, 31

A Sabbath Thought.

O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker. For He is our God; and we are the people of His pasture.—Psalm 95:6, 7.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ITEMS

Pittsburgh.—Michael Mazjak, a foreman employed by a glass company, was shot and killed while working in the garden at his home here. County detectives are searching for a man who two weeks ago was discharged by Mazjak. The dead man was married and leaves a widow and seven small children.

York.—Scarcity of orders for river coal has caused the fleet of dredges at work in the Susquehanna river opposite Goldsboro to suspend operations. Until recently there had been a profitable demand for the fine screenings from the mines, washed down and deposited in the river bed.

Beaver Meadow.—A carnival which showed here and drew automobile parties from 100 miles around because of dances in which several young women performed was driven from Carbon county by Constable Bettels, who forced cancellation of other engagements.

Hazleton.—Feeding his herd of fourteen goats was a simple matter for Michael Yeshina, living on the outskirts of town, until the police broke up his system of taking a fence palloff so the animals could get into a nice vegetable garden for the day. Mayor Heidenreich collected a fine of $42 for one day's grazing.

Payette City.—Joseph Yapicz, a miner, reported that $8000, with which he had expected to purchase a home, was missing from his room in a boarding house. He told the authorities that he was to be married within a few days and that he drew the money from the bank in the expectation of purchasing a home. Yapicz said that he would give a reward of $300 for the apprehension of the proprietress of the boarding house, who, it is alleged, disappeared with her three children shortly before it was discovered that the money was missing.

Pottstown.—Rudolph Mikula, superintendent of a large bakery here, was attacked by four men on a bridge on Washington street, robbed of $17 and thrown to the railroad tracks, thirty feet below. He sustained a fractured ankle and other injuries. He is unable to give a description of his assailants on account of the darkness.

York.—Falling head foremost into a cesspool, Stuart, 4-year-old son of Oscar Hunter, met a terrible death at his home at New Freedom. The little fellow had been playing in the yard and disappeared. A search revealed his body in the pool.

Pottsville.—After Charles Alberts, a 7-year-old boy, caught his head in the opening of a sewer it took the city highway department and several policemen to release him. The boy's head was wedged between stones and the more he struggled the tighter the hold upon him became. It was necessary to pry the stones loose with a crowbar before he could be released.

Reading.—The Reading Iron company has announced a general reduction in the selling prices of its tubular goods, nails and bar iron, the third since January 1, and a new scale of wages to go into effect about July 18 for men now employed and when operations are resumed. None of the mills of the company is in operation at the present time, but the hope is expressed that the large reductions made in the selling prices of its products will bring in some business and enable the company to start its mills on part time in the near future.

However, he was caught in a chain and dragged through a field for a distance of forty feet. Kauffman was unconscious when picked up, but he is expected to recover.

Pottsville.—Samuel Evans, of Camden, N. J., shortstop of the Minersville baseball club, died here from the effect of drinking a glass of ice water on the Fourth of July, which so disabled him that he had to be taken out of the game that day and taken to the Pottsville Hospital. Evans' mother and his stepfather, George McCann, of Camden, were with him when he died. Evans was much overheated when he drank the water.

Norristown.—Melancholy over the death of her sister and fearful she would lose her money, is thought to have impelled Miss Mary E. Cowden, 65 years to end her life with illuminating gas. According to Mrs. Elizabeth Frankenkfield, 86, who lived with her, the end of the tube from a gas stove was in her mouth when she found her.

Williamsport.—The first evidences of stream pollution in the West Branch Valley in months occurred when dead fish appeared on the surface in water which took on the greenish color which indicates the presence of acid. Thousands of bathers who had turned to the river for relief from the heat wave will be kept from it until the water becomes cleaner. Physicians were called upon to administer to youths who were affected by the poison while swimming before the presence of the polluting matter was detected.

The fiery liquid burned out her stomach and intestines, and within two hours after taking the poison the woman was dead. Dr. Henry Dierschedl, city coroner, said a more painful death could hardly have been devised. Mrs. Dando had frequently threatened she would "end it all" by taking her own life, but as she had a happy home, no serious attention was paid to what was thought to be only idle words.

LAST MONTH, on a bet.
WITH THE boys up home.
I SPENT a night
ALONE in the old.
HAUNTED HOUSE.
AND WHEN I heard.
MOANS AND groans.
I SAID "The wind."
AND TRIED to sleep.
I HEARD rattlings.
AND SAID "Rats."
AND ROLLED over.
THEN I heard steps.
AND IN the light.
OF A dying moon.
A WHITE spook rose.
I WASN'T scared—much.
BUT DIDN'T feel like.
STARTING ANYTHING.
BUT THEN I caught.
JUST A faint whiff.

OF A familiar.
AND DELICIOUS smell.
WHICH TIPPED me off.
SO I gave the ghost.
THE HORSE laugh.
AND SAID "Ed.
YOU FAT guys.
MAKE BUM ghosts.
BUT BEFORE you fade.
LEAVE WITH me one.
OF YOUR cigarettes.
THEY SATISFY."

THAT spicy, delicious aroma of fine tobaccos, both Turkish and Domestic, makes you almost hungry for the "satisfy-smoke." And there isn't a ghost of a chance you'll ever find its equal anywhere—for the Chesterfield blend is an exclusive blend. It can't be copied.

THE U. S. USCO TREAD

Here is the U. S. Usco Tread, with a long-established standard of service among motorists who have an eye to value, as well as to price. While selling for less than the other tires in the U. S. Fabric line, the Usco has earned a reputation for quality and dependable economy which is not exceeded by any tire in its class.

The standard tire likes nothing better than to prove its service

PEOPLE used to be secretly envious of the young fellow who came tearing up the street and stopped his car with a jerk.

Now they are inclined to criticize such abuse of tires. A mark of the growing consciousness about tires—their service, their work, their value.

This same respect for a good tire is the reason why the four-square tire dealer has passed up odds and ends, "job lots", "seconds", "cut prices"—and come out squarely with the standard quality service of U. S. Tires.

He is getting a bigger, and also better, tire business than he ever had before.

He is dealing now with his own kind of people. The substantial citizen. The man who knows that you can't get something for nothing. The steady customer—not the bargain hunter.

"THERE'S DEATH IN THE POT"

A Celebrated London Doctor Used the Above to Emphasize the Danger of Overeating. Worse Than Overeating is Failure to Eliminate Waste.

Nature could not devise a way to feed and repair the body without the production of considerable waste matter. But Nature provided for the regular, thorough elimination of such waste. To disregard her intention is to break a natural law.

Whether you help Nature by wise or foolish means is left to your own judgment. To simply force bowel movement is unwise, unnatural and ineffective. You can choose harsh, drastic, violently acting drugs or take such without caring what their action or effect is, or you can select some old time-proven, trial-tested remedy, that has been used for 70 years or more by thousands of people all over the world, with the result that it has won an enviable reputation as a reliable household remedy. Take Beecham's for example. All the world knows Beecham's; a goodly part of the world uses Beecham's, has been using it for years, handing its use down from father to son, from mother to daughter, for generation after generation, recommending it to others. In spite of such extensive and general use, who ever heard complaint or criticism of Beecham's? That in itself is a powerful recommendation.

Don't take anything for granted Reason it out. All druggists sell Beecham's—are glad to sell them. Beecham's reputation has been made by its users not by its sellers.

About the Rich. There are just two classes of rich men—those who claim they earned every dollar they possess, and the others who admit that while they may not have earned all they have they deserve it, none the less.

THE LAST STORM

By GEORGIA F. HARRIS.

(© 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The fields of nodding daisies brought a swift smile to the lips of the tired traveler, and pausing in the middle of the dusty road, he breathed a sigh of deep content.

"The last turn in the road," he murmured, "then—then—home—to Letty and the boy."

His hand stole involuntarily to his breast pocket as he mused, and he fingered the fat wallet he found there with a caressing hand. Then, with a keen feeling of satisfaction, he started on his way with quickened pace.

The familiar landmarks brought memories, and with a feeling of shame and remorse his thoughts dwelt on his unhappy past. He wondered if Letty would find it in her heart to forgive him—his pace slackened again as his face saddened.

But the smile returned when he saw a sturdy little blue-overalled youngster, wading through the fields, his arms filled with daisies, and the man called out, "Hello, Sonny!"

"Hello," replied the little boy with friendly grin, dropping his daisies.

"What's your name?" inquired the traveler, smilingly watching the youngster as he rearranged his flowers.

"Bob," returned the boy briefly, intent upon his task. "What's yours?"

"My name is Bob, too," answered the man promptly.

"Gee, that's a co-co-incidence," the little fellow exclaimed.

An amused expression overspread the man's face.

"Of course," the little boy went on, "that's only my nickname. My business name is Robert V. Merwin. That's what my business papers say."

A lump arose in the man's throat and the green fields swam about him.

"And what are your business papers, my little man?" he finally asked.

"Oh, my vaccination certificate and my report cards and so forth," the boy airily replied. "Of course, they aren't like mother's business papers, 'cause I haven't a desk like hers or a real business."

"A real business," the man echoed, "and what sort of business is that?"

"Women's shop, pretty things for women," the youngster glibly replied.

"You live near by?" the man fairly jerked out the words.

"Yep," answered the boy. Then looking curiously at the man he added, "but I guess you don't."

"Why not?"

"Well, 'cause I guess everybody 'round here knows me. You know, they used to call me 'poor Letty Merwin's young one.'"

"And your dad?" the words fell from the man's lips as though he had not the power to stop them.

"Ain't got one," answered the boy indifferently, "leastways, he's never been 'round here, I guess. P'haps he'll be sneaking back now, though."

The man caught his breath sharply. "Why do you say that?" he asked.

"Well, that's only what Miss Henderson and Emily says. Emily says the other day when I went over in my new suit, 'I s'pose Merwin—that's my dad—will be sneaking back, if he hears Letty—that's my mother—is doin' so good.'"

The man turned sadly away and buried his face in his hands.

"And your mother—" the man murmured, "what does she say?"

"She never says nothing, 'cept once when I asked her and she said, 'Well, Bobbie-boy,' she says, 'guess we're better off without any Daddy, so let's never, never talk about him.'"

"And she was just right," the man said, slowly arising to his feet. "You are better off without him—she was just right."

The man closed his eyes for a moment. "Comin' down the road?" the child was asking.

"No," the man answered wearily, "I guess I'm on the wrong road. I wanted to get to the railroad station."

"Then I should say you were on the wrong road," emphatically declared the boy. "Good thing I met you, else you'd be 'way out of your way.'"

"Yes, it was a good thing," choked the man. He paused a second then added, "Going right home to—mother?"

The child nodded.

"Can I trust you to bring an important business envelope to her?"

"Try me. I bring the rent money to Mr. Tribble loads of times."

The man turned aside, and, taking the huge roll of bills from his wallet, placed the money in a large envelope. Hastily sealing it, he turned to the child and said:

"Tell mother that this will help her in her business—"

"Then she'll be glad to get it," the little one answered confidently. "Pin it right inside my blouse and it'll be safe all right."

The man knelt and with trembling hands pinned the envelope inside the little blouse.

"Good-bye—dear little Bob," he said, bravely attempting to smile.

"Good-bye, Mr. Bob," answered the youngster.

Absently jingling a few coins in his trousers' pockets, the man, with head bent, walked very slowly for a few paces. Then he turned and gazed after the retreating figure of the little child, the long stems of the daisies trailing after him in the dust, until the bend in the road hid him from view.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS.

For those who are fond of corn products this corn bread will be attractive:

Corn Bread.

Take one cupful each of water and buttermilk, one-half cupful of flour, one and one-half cupfuls of corn meal, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of baking powder and one egg. Sift the soda and baking powder with the flour, add the other ingredients, with a teaspoonful of salt, and bake in a hot oven.

Corn Mush Bread.

Heat one pint of milk until boiling; add three-quarters of a cupful of corn meal, one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of butter, and cook this batter on the top of the stove until it is thick. Remove from the heat and cool. When cold, stir in the well-beaten yolks of four eggs and fold in the stiffly beaten whites; bake in a well greased pudding dish and serve hot from the pan. This quantity makes sufficient for six.

Compote of Rice With Peaches.

Add two-thirds of a cupful of well-washed rice to a cupful of boiling water; steam until the rice has absorbed the water, then add one and one-third cupfuls of milk, boiling hot, one tea-spoonful of salt and one-quarter of a cupful of sugar. Cook until the rice is soft. Turn into a buttered mold and when firm remove to a serving dish and arrange sections of very ripe peaches, dipped into macaroni crumbs. Use whipped cream and garnish with candied cherries for a sauce with which to serve the rice.

Dutch Apple Cake.

Separate the whites and yolks of two eggs. Beat the yolks and add one and one-half cupfuls of milk, a tablespoonful of butter, melted, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of flour that have been sifted with three level teaspoonfuls of baking powder; beat quickly, fold in the well-beaten whites of the eggs and turn into a shallow baking pan. Cover the top with cored, peeled and quartered apples; dust with half a cupful of sugar and a bit of cinnamon if liked. Bake in a moderate oven for half an hour and serve with cream and sugar or as a hot bread with tea or coffee.

THE DEMOCRATS AT WORK

The Democrats in the Senate and House at Washington are making a great record. They have reduced the army against the protest of Secretary of War Weeks; they have reduced the navy appropriation against the protest of Secretary of the Navy Denby and they have aided in the passage of the Borah resolution requesting the President to call a conference of the leading nations to start disarmament. That is a mighty good start. Of course, they could have done nothing without the aid of insurgent Republicans, but the Democrats furnished the largest number of votes now for the amendment of the Federal Reserve act (to which attention is called in other editorials) and the reduction of taxes. The reactionaries want to relieve the big taxpayers first; the Democrats insist on protecting the small taxpayers and the Democrats will win. The Knox-Porter resolution divided the Democrats, but it was of very little importance to the party; the war is over and it did no harm (and but little good) to make the formal declaration.

The reaction has set in; the Republican majority would be several millions less if the vote were taken today.

POSTAL SERVICE FOR PROFIT

Postmaster General Hays plans to increase the cost of sending a special delivery letter from 10 cents to 25 "on the supposition that the general public will prefer to pay the higher charge for better service." There is no question that the public would welcome the speedier delivery of all mail matter, but its desire to pay more for the privilege is not so manifest. Ten cents still seems to most people a high enough fee to exact for special delivery letters.

No doubt the regular postage were raised from 2 cents to 5 the increase revenue would enable the Post Office Department to render better service and earn a larger income. But it was not designed that the Post Office should be run at a profit. It was established to diffuse intelligence and facilitate communication at the least possible cost. It is only since McKinley's Administration that the fallacious theory has obtained that it should be a gainful branch of government.

The rest of the Post Office is efficient service, not capacity for producing revenue. It is enough that it should come somewhere near to being self-supporting. If profits were a main consideration it would be better to turn over to a private corporation to operate.

"If I were not so busy with my farm work I would go from house to house and tell the people about Tanlac," said A. J. Livingston, a well-known farmer living near Ashland City, Tenn.

"I had stomach and kidney trouble and suffered torment with my back and side. The doctor could do nothing for me so I wrote to a friend of mine in Nashville about Tanlac and he advised me to try it, saying he had heard so many favorable reports about it and sent me a bottle.

"After taking the first bottle I felt so much better that I ordered another bottle myself and the result is I am a well man. I told a friend of mine about it and ordered a bottle for him and he had good results. I can eat anything I want and it don't hurt me and can sleep like a log. To tell you the truth, I just simply feel like a new man and have more strength and energy that I have had in years. It is simply the grandest medicine in the world. I would like to see all of my friends and those who are suffering to try it and I hope you will reach them through this testimonial, which I have gladly given."

Tanlac, the celebrated medicine, which accomplished such remarkable results in this man's case, is a wonderful tonic, appetizer and invigorant. It builds up the system, creates a healthy appetite, promotes digestion and assimilation of the food and makes you feel strong, sturdy and well as nature intended.

A TARIFF FOR PLUNDER

The valuation clause of the Fordney bill imposes in effect a tariff on the tariff. No more ingenious device for plundering the consumer has ever found its way into legislation.

By the terms of the bill the word "value" in the classification of merchandise "shall mean the price on the date of exportation of the imported merchandise at which comparable and competitive products of the United States were ordinarily sold or freely offered for sale in the usual wholesale quantities" in the principal markets of the United States. Whenever, therefore, the beneficiaries of the Fordney tariff increase the wholesale prices of their product at home they will automatically increase the duty and add to the measure of protection that they receive. The higher the prices they can manage to charge, the higher the tariff becomes by the simple process of making their prices the basis of valuation on imports. Thus the duties are pyramided and foreign competition against extortion becomes the more difficult the more that extortion is practiced.

This is not a tariff for protection in any sense in which that term has hitherto been employed, even in the days of McKinleyism and Dingleyism. It is a straight-out tariff for plunder. The more plunder the more tariff.

Mr Fordney's excuse for this provision is the rate of exchange. The effect of this provision is to take from the consumer all of the benefits that might come from the rate of exchange and confer them on the protected manufacturer, who for all practical purposes will be able to fix the duties himself.

There have been grave and shocking abuses in previous Tariff Bills but there was nothing that compared in iniquity with the valuation clause of the Fordney measure. Existing economic circumstances make the Fordney schedules indefensible for the most part, even on the century-old basis of foreign valuation. When that is abandoned and the American selling price is made the basis of valuation, every household in the country is placed under tribute.

As it stands, the Fordney tariff should be entitled "A bill to enable favored industries to plunder the American people."

THE LION IN THE WAY

The tax question looms large at Washington—it is the supreme question. Now let's see how the Republican leaders can satisfy the demands of big business. It there were only some way to transfer the burden UNSEEN, from the rich to the poor it would be easy, but the poor are looking. The farmers can not stand any more taxes—their prices are falling. The laborers can not stand any more taxes—their wages are not standing any more taxes—their profits are falling? If the profiteer can't pay his taxes who can? And besides, the profiteer is the only man who can by his own act relieve himself. If he stops stealing his excess profits tax stops.

Live Stock Facts

GREAT AID TO CITIZENSHIP

Intelligent Contact With Farm Animals Always Will Insure Quality in the Farmer.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In a message to the directors and members of the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' association, Andrew W. Hopkins, until recently its secretary, makes the following statement: "It truly is a noteworthy fact that where live stock farming has attained a high standard of perfection there also has citizenship attained an equally high standard. An intelligent contact with farm animals always has and always will insure quality in the men; and a closer kinship with the better types surely brings forth fruits not yet compassed. General education, honesty of purpose, righteous living, culture."

Cattle and Corn—A Good Combination in Profitable Farming.

and religion have made the most progress in these communities in which intelligent stock farming has been most generally pursued."

The United States Department of Agriculture has received a copy of Mr. Hopkins' recommendations for the future development of the live stock industry in Wisconsin. These recommendations point out that stockmen may well seek to increase their returns from live stock: (1) by discarding inferior animals, (2) by strengthening their organizations, (3) by co-operating when necessary in buying and selling, (4) by combating disease, (5) by supporting boys' and girls' club work, (6) by studying live stock and milk marketing, (7) by insisting upon more stabilized markets, and (8) working for the proper relation between the price paid the producer and that paid by the consumer.

IMPROVEMENT OF PUREBREDS

Virginia Farmer Gradually 'Helps Quality of Stock by Using Those of Superior Type.

Of 151 head of live stock on a farm in Shenandoah county, Va., all but five are of pure breeding, the United States Department of Agriculture is advised. Cattle and swine are the principal classes of animals kept.

In participating in the "Better Sires—Better Stock" campaign, the owner of these animals states that he castrates all inferior and surplus hogs, keeping none for breeding that can not be registered. "I castrated 26 in one day," he adds. "Three of these were good enough yearling boars to head most herds." By keeping only those animals for breeding which are of superior type, this farmer is gradually improving the quality of stock on his farm.

CONSIDERING OATS FOR HOGS

Not Worth While Unless Selling for Less Than One-Half as Much Per Bushel as Corn.

As a general rule it is not worth while to consider oats as a feed for hogs unless they are selling for less than one-half as much per bushel as corn. In case the hogs are being carried along rather slowly, however, or the tankage is extremely high-priced, it may be worth while to feed as much as a pound of oats per pig daily. In any case continue to depend chiefly on corn and tankage, feeding at least two or three parts of corn for each part of oats and at least one-fourth of a pound of tankage per pig daily.

EWES NEED AMPLE EXERCISE

Excellent Plan to Scatter Rough Feed Away From Sheds and Let Them Pick It Over.

No matter how well they are cared for, if they do not have ample exercise the ewes are likely to have very unthrifty lambs. An excellent way to exercise the flock is to scatter out some rough feed away from the sheds every day, and permit them to pick it over.

FEEDING ROUGHAGE TO SOWS

Care Should Be Taken by Farmer That It Is Bright, Nutritious and Free From Mold.

Under no condition should a brood sow be fed upon any roughage which is not bright, nutritious and free from smut or mold. She does not relish or thrive on such inferior feed. It is very apt to cause severe digestive troubles, and may lead to the loss of her litter.

It's a long, long way to "Normalcy", It's a long way to go.

Zero Meek, who is planning to give an ice cream supper at the Wild Rose school house and who this week had some circulars printed to be used in advertising the event has discovered that the printer of Pumpkinnville made quite a mistake and he is going back over there and make him print them over without extra pay. He says the printer seemed to be a sort of slyart Billick anyhow. He added a line to the circular which said "Everybody cordially invited." Zero says this will have to be corrected, as if everybody should come he would not have near enough cream. He wants it to read "You are invited."

Buick Delivered 13,759 Autos to Owners In June

Figures that reflect the strength and potentiality of the United States and one of the greatest industries were released for publication today by the Buick Motor Company. They show that during the month of June past, 13,759 Buick Six's were delivered into the hands of owners all were cars ranging in price from $1495 to $26335 F. O. B. Flint.

"Some one has said that the automobile industry was through with big figures but these totals prove the contrary" said E. T. Strong General Sales Manager who made the announcement. The fact that nearly 14000 Buick Cars were placed in the hands of owners in June should not be regarded as astounding or phenomenal.

Instead the figures can be interpreted as a concrete demonstration of the tendency of the people to invest in a product which they want and actually need.

Note:-- An announcement important to all who contemplate the purchase of "A Good Four Cylinder Automobile" was deferred from July 15th to July 29th.

POULTRY

PROPER MARKETING OF EGGS

Much of Animal Loss Can Be Prevented By Use of Purebred Stock and Better Care.

It is estimated that the annual production of poultry and eggs in the United States is in excess of $800,000,000—the value of the hay or the wheat crop—and it is also estimated that there is a total loss of nearly 8 per cent of the eggs marketed.

This great loss is due largely to improper handling between the farm and the market. Many farmers look upon eggs as a by-product, and the returns as so much clear gain. The hens forage for a living, and the eggs are gathered when convenient and kept almost anywhere. Such carelessness and a combination of mongrel stock, dirty nests, stolen nests of broody hens, unconfined males, late-maturing pullets, and other undesirable conditions explain why the product includes a high percentage of small, cracked, dirty, stale, heated, and even rotten eggs.

Occasionally the accumulations of all these kinds of eggs are taken to the country merchants and exchanged for merchandise. The merchant usually buys these eggs "case count," paying the same price for all kinds and sizes, provided they are eggs with an unbroken shell. Small production results in small or infrequent shipments.

Many of these losses, the United States Department of Agriculture says can be prevented by selecting pure breeds that lay more or larger eggs, such as the Leghorns, Wyandottes, Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds, Orpingtons, etc.; giving better care, food, and shelter; with dry, clean, vermin-proof nests; confining males except in breeding season; collecting eggs frequently, especially in hot or muggy weather; storing eggs in a dry, clean, cool place; using small and dirty eggs at home; marketing frequently, with protection at all times from heat; selling for cash on a basis of size and quality, "loss off" instead of "case count"; using an attractive package; and combining shipments as a matter of economy.

The chocolate festival held by the Ladies' Aid society of the Lutheran church on the lawn on Saturday evening was a splendid success. Chocolate milkshake, chocolate cake, chocolate ice cream, chocolate bars, etc., with some variety of other favors to suit the tastes or customers were on sale.

The condition of Grandmother Watters of Potter Creek, who fell down a flight of stairs at her home on July 3, is not encouraging.

Elmer Grace and family of Woodbury motored to Potter Creek for a visit to Levi Overs.

Herbert Longenaker and his sister Ruth and the Misses Sara Brown of Altoona and Earl Stoudenour of Roaring Spring were visitors at the home of the Longenaker sisters at Woodbury last week.

Luther Amick and wife, newlyweds, were given a kitchen shower some days ago and from indications, are able to start housekeeping with a neat supply of household utensils brought to them with good wishes for a long future on the journey of life together.

Miss Lizzie Longenaker of Woodbury, as the secretary of the Replogle clan and the reunion feature that is now planning, will be pleased to furnish information to those who inquire of her touching history thus far gathered herative to this old family name in Morrisons Cove. The next reunion is to be held at Pine Hill, near New Enterprise, on Aug. 11.

The committees appointed are: Grocery, Jere Detwiler, chairman, John Sell, George Stayer; reception, L. Z. Replogle, D. R. Stayer, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Replogle, G. Z. Replogle, John Baker, music, Wilson Mentzer, Martha Stayer, John Snowberger. All members and friends of this clan are cordially invited to be present on Aug. 11 to enjoy the occasion.

Mrs. Roy Walters was to Altoona over Sunday attending the military funeral held for her nephew just brought home with several thousand other bodies from France.

The huckleberry season is just coming in for ripeness. Some reports are that at places the crop is promising while at others there is a shortage. Likely this, too, is because of the late frosts that affected cherries and apples and other fruits, berries and vegetables.

Dr. and Mrs. Berkhelmer of Roaring Spring, on an auto trip to the south of the Cove, took time for a short chat with friends in passing through town on Thursday.

George R. Imler and son Carning made a business trip to Hollidaysburg and Altoona a few days ago. The son is arranging to return to F. and M. college at Lancaster at the opening of the next school year.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Bassler and son John of Marble City spent a few days with Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Bassler.

Mrs. C. T. Detwiler was visited on Wednesday by Dr. and Mrs. Charles Bumgardner of Altoona.

The Misses Grace and Ruth Burns of Altoona spent a vacation with Mr. and Mrs. Ed Burns at the parental home.

Lloyd Staver and Rev. C. F. Gehart motored to New Enterprise the forepart of last week on business matters for a banking firm of Pittsburgh.

BEST ARRANGEMENT OF HENS

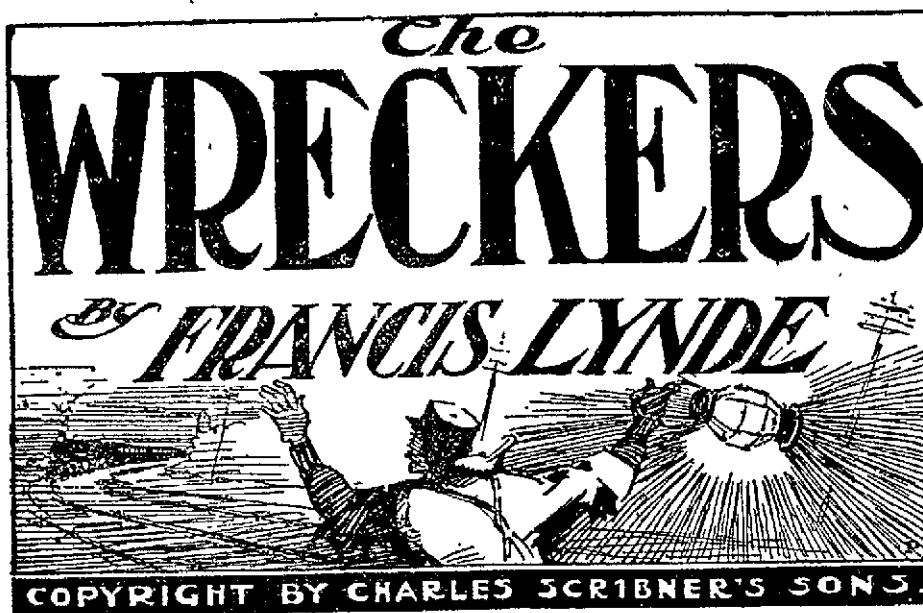

Erroneous to Mate Male With Too Many Females for Fertile Eggs and Strong Chicks.

Avoid the error of mating a male with too many females. One male to six or eight females of the American breeds, or 10 or 12 of the Mediterranean breeds, will give a higher percentage of fertile eggs and more vigorous chickens than if half a dozen males are used.

PUT TURKEYS IN CONDITION

Fowls Should Not Be Confined Except for Short Period Just Before Marketing.

Turkeys ought not to be confined for any length of time just for a short time prior to marketing. If fed liberally while they have a free run, they can be kept in condition for marketing within ten days.

Chapter XII

The things that have to be done will go grinding on, just the same, whether all of us live, or some of us die. Disbrow had jumped from the telephone at the crash of Durgin's shot, and for just a second or so we all stood around the dead dispatcher, nobody making a move.

Then Mr. Norcross came alive with a jerk, telling Disbrow to get back on his job of calling out the wreck wagons and the relief train, and directing Bobby Kelso to go to another phone and call an undertaker to come and get Durgin's body. Tarbell turned back to the train desk to keep things from getting into a worse tangle than they already were in, and to wait for the dreadful news, and the boss stood by him.

This second wait promised to be the worst of all. The collision was due to happen miles from the nearest wire station; the news, when we should get it, would probably be carried back to Bauxite Junction by the pusher engine which had gone out to try to overtake the "Flyer." But even in that case it might be an agonizing hour or more before we could hear anything.

In a little while Disbrow had clicked in his call to Kirgan, and when the undertaker's wagon came to gather up what was left of the dead dispatcher, the car-record man was hurriedly writing off his list of doctors, and Mr. Van Britt had gone down to superintend the making up of the relief train. True to his theory, which, among other things, laid down the broad principle that the public had a right to be given all the facts in a railroad disaster, Mr. Norcross was just telling me to call up the Mountaineer office, when Tarbell, calmly inking time reports upon the train sheet, lunged down his pen and snatched at his key to "break" the chattering sounder.

Mr. Van Britt had come up-stairs again, and he and the boss were both standing over Tarbell when the "G-S" break cleared the wire. Instantly there came a quick call, "G-S" "G-S" followed by the signature, "B-J" for Bauxite Junction. Tarbell answered, and then we all heard what Bauxite had to say:

"Pusher overtook Number Four three miles west of Sand Creek and has brought her back here. What orders for her?"

Somebody groaned, "Oh, thank God!" and Mr. Van Britt dropped into a chair as if he had been hit by a cannon ball. Only the boss kept his head, calling out sharply to Disbrow to break off on the doctors' list and to hurry and stop Kirgan from getting away with the wrecking train.

When it was all over, and Tarbell had been given charge of the dispatching while a hurry call was sent out for the night relief man, Donohue, to come down and take the train desk, there was a little committee meeting in the general manager's office, with the boss in the chair, and Mr. Van Britt sitting in for the other member.

"Of course, you've drawn your own conclusions, Upton," the boss began, when he had asked me to shut the door.

"I guess so," was the grave rejoinder. "I'm afraid it is only too plain that Durgin was hired to do it. What became of the money?"

"I have it here," said the boss, and he took the blue-money bank-roll from his pocket and removed the rubber band. "Count it, Jimmie," he ordered, passing it to me.

I ran through the bunch. It was in twenties and fifties, and there was an even thousand dollars.

There Was an Even Thousand Dollars.

"That is the price of a man's life," said Mr. Van Britt, soberly, and then Mr. Norcross said, "Who knows anything about Durgin? Was he a married man?"

Mr. Van Britt shook his head. "He had been married, but he and his wife didn't live together. He had no relatives here. I knew him in the southwest two years ago. He'd had domestic trouble of some kind, and didn't mix or mingle much with the other men. But he was a good dispatcher, and two months ago, when we had an opening here, I sent for him."

"You think there is no doubt but that he was bribed to put those trains together tonight?"

"None in the least—only I wish we had a little better proof of it."

"Where did he live?"

"He boarded at Mrs. Chandler's, out on Cross street. Morris boards there, too, I believe."

The boss turned to me. "Jimmie, go and get Morris."

I carried the call and brought Morris back with me. He was a cheerful, red-headed fellow, and everybody liked him.

"It isn't a 'sweat-box' session, Morris," said the boss quietly, when we came in and the relief operator sat down, sort of half scared, on the edge of a chair. "We want to know something more about Durgin. He roomed at your place, didn't he?"

Morris admitted it, but said he'd never been very chummy with the dispatcher; that Durgin wasn't chummy with anybody. Then the boss went straight to the point, as he usually did.

"You were present and saw all that happened in the other room. Can you tell us anything about that money?" pointing to the pile of bills on my desk.

Billy Morris wriggled himself into a little better chair-hold. "Nothing that would be worth telling, if things hadn't turned out just as they have," he returned. "But now I guess I know. I left Mrs. Chandler's this evening about eleven o'clock to come on duty, and Durgin was just ahead of me. Some fellow—a man in a snuff-colored overcoat and with a soft hat pulled down so that I couldn't see his face—stopped Durgin on the sidewalk, and they talked together."

"I didn't hear what was said, but I saw the overcoated man pass something to Durgin and saw Durgin put whatever it was into his pocket. Then the other man dodged and went away, and did it so quick that I didn't see which way he went or what became of him. Durgin must have run after he left the corner, for I didn't see anything more of him until I got to the office."

"He was there when you came in?" It was Mr. Norcross who wanted to know.

"Yes. He had his coat off and was at work on the train sheet. I don't think Durgin left his chair, or said anything to anybody until he jumped up and began to walk the floor, taking on and saying that he'd put Four and Five together on the single track."

There was silence for a little time, and when the boss said, "Do you think you would recognize the man in the snuff-colored overcoat, if you should see him again?"

"Yes, I might; if he had on the same coat and hat."

"That will do, then. Keep this thing to yourself, and if the newspaper people come after you, send them to Mr. Van Britt or to me."

After Morris had gone, Mr. Van Britt shook his head sort of savagely.

"It's h—l, Graham!" he ripped out, bouncing to his feet and beginning to tramp up and down the room. "To think that these devils would take the chance of murdering a lot of totally innocent people to gain their end! What are you going to do about it?"

"I don't know yet, Upton; but I am going to do something. This state of affairs can't go on. The simplest thing is for me to throw up the job and let the Short Line drop back into the old rut. I'm not sure that it wouldn't save a good many lives in the end if I should do it. And yet it seems such a cowardly thing to do—to resign under fire."

Mr. Van Britt had his hand on the door-knob, and what he said made me warm to my finger-tips.

"We're all standing by you, Graham; all you understand—to the last man and the last ditch. And you're not going to pitch it up; you're going to stay until you have thrown the harpoon into these high-binders, clear up to the hitchings. That's my prophecy. The trouble's over for tonight, and you'd better go up to the hotel and turn in. There is another day coming, or if there isn't, it won't make any difference to any of us. Good-night."

CHAPTER XIII

What the Pilot Engine Found
For a time after the suicide of the off-trick-dispatcher the wreck epidemic paused. Acting upon Mr. Norcross's suggestion, Mr. Van Britt called his trainmen in, a crew at a time, and gave them the straight tip; and after that the hoodoo died a natural death, and a good many pairs of eyes all along the Short Line were keeping a sharp lookout for the trouble-makers.

In the meantime, Tarbell, still digging faithfully, managed to turn up a few facts that were worth something. In the Petrolite case he found a lone prospector living in a shack high up on the farther side of the canyon who told him that late in the evening of the day preceding the wreck he had seen two men climbing the slope from which the boulder had been dislodged, and that one of them was carrying a pick. Also, further investigation seemed to prove that the rail which the blow of the rock was supposed to have knocked loose had been previously weakened, either by drawing some of the spikes, or by unscrewing the nuts on the bolts at the joints.

In another field, and this time under Ripley's instructions, our ex-cow-punch had been able to set and bait a trap. By diligent search he had found the man Murphy, the Clanahan henchman, who, under pressure, had given away the Timber Mountain plot which had climaxed in the kidnapping of the boss. This man had been deliberately shot in a bar-room brawl and left for dead. But he had crawled away and had got out of town to live and recover at a distant cattle ranch in the Limberton hills.

When Tarbell discovered him he had cut out the booze, had grown a beard, and was thirsting for vengeance. Tarbell brought him back to Portal City, and presently there began to be developments. Murphy knew all the ropes. In a little time, Ripley, with Tarbell's help, was loaded for bear. One chilly October afternoon the lawyer came down to our office to tell Mr. Norcross that the game was cornered.

"All you have to do now is to give the word," was the way Ripley wound up. "You refused to do it on a former occasion, because we couldn't get the men higher up. This time we can nail Clanahan, and a good few of the political gangsters and bosses in the other towns along the line. What do you say?"

The boss looked up with the little horse-shoe frown wrinkling between his eyes.

"Can we get Hatch and Henckel?"

"No; not yet."

"Very well; then you may lock those papers up in your safe and we'll wait. When you can see your way clear to a criminal trial, with Rufus Hatch and Gustave Henckel in the prisoner's dock, we'll start the legal machinery; but not before."

By now we were right on the eve of the state election. As far as anybody could see, the railroad had stayed free and clear of the political fight. The boss had kept his promise to maintain neutrality and was still keeping it.

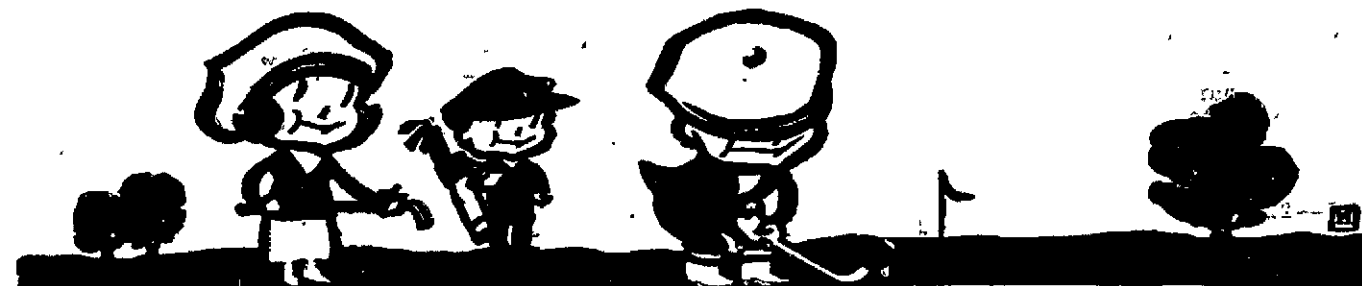

At the appointed time the big day dawned, and the political wind-up held the center of the stage. So far as we were concerned, it passed off very quietly. Along in the afternoon the newspaper offices began to put out bulletins, and by evening the result was no longer doubtful. For the first time in years the power of the political machine had been smashed decisively at the polls, and on the following morning the Mountaineer announced the election of Governor Burrell, with a safe working majority in both houses of the legislature for the Independents.

It was on the third day after the election, rather late in the afternoon, that the boss had a call from a mining promoter named Dawes, representing a bunch of mine owners at Strathcona who were having trouble with smelter. The smelter, one of the few Hatch monopolies which hadn't been shaken loose as yet, was located in the gulch six miles below Strathcona, and it was served exclusively by its own industrial railroad, which it was using as a lever to pry an excessive hauling charge out of the mine owners. Wouldn't Mr. Norcross try to do something about it?

The boss said he'd do anything he could, and asked what the mine owners wanted. Dawes said they wanted help; that they were going to hold a mass meeting in Strathcona the following morning at nine o'clock. Would it, or wouldn't it, be possible for Mr. Norcross to be present at that meeting?

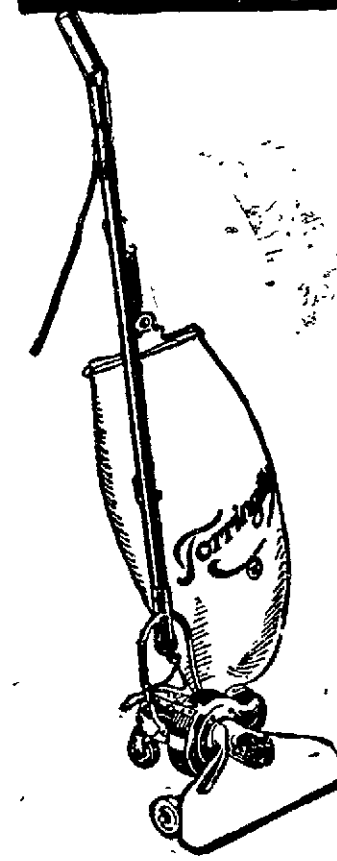

Of course, the boss said he'd go.

Allow yourself more time for recreation by using a Torrington Electric Vacuum Cleaner.

You are sure a Torrington Cleaner will do a perfect job, because the TORRINGTON SPIRAL BRUSH loosens the dirt and the suction gets it. The brush is surrounded with suction, but revolves independent of the motor. This brush loosens all the lint, while the suction takes up the imbedded bits of dirt and trodden-in grit.

BECAUSE we put the utmost quality into this one brand. Camels are as good as it's possible for skill, money and lifelong knowledge of fine tobaccos to make a cigarette.

Nothing is too good for Camels. And bear this in mind! Everything is done to make Camels the best cigarette it's possible to buy. Nothing is done simply for show.

Take the Camel package for instance. It's the most perfect packing science can devise to protect cigarettes and keep them fresh. Heavy paper—secure foil wrapping—revenue stamp to seal the fold and make the package air-tight. But there's nothing flashy about it. You'll find no extra wrappers. No frills or furbelows.

Such things do not improve the smoke any more than premiums or coupons! And remember—you must pay their extra cost or get lowered quality.

If you want the smoothest, mellowest, mildest cigarette you can imagine—and one entirely free from cigarettey aftertaste,

It's Camels for you.

DANIELS TELLS OF BRITAIN'S WAR ENVOYS TO WASHINGTON

Balfour and Northcliffe: A study in contrasts—The aristocratic commoner and the journalistic peer—The philosopher and the man of action—"Bloody Balfour" an impossible combination—The British mission and its experts—

By Josephus Daniels

Former Secretary of the Navy

Two figures stand out with unforgettable distinction from the group of interesting trans-Atlantic personalities which visited us in the days immediately following our entrance into the war.

Taken singly each has an individuality which anywhere would command attention. Together they present as strong a contrast as one could well find in men of the same race.

Arthur James Balfour came first, at the head of the British high commissioners, who arrived in Washington on Sunday, April 22, 1917—sixteen days after our declaration. Two months later came Lord Northcliffe.

It is of these two men in particular that I want to write in this article. They made a profound impression upon Washington and they did much to promote the co-operation which was essential to the successful doing of the common task.

Of course both men were well known to us by reputation. Northcliffe had been in the United States before the war and had many acquaintances here.

Balfour we knew as a statesman, a student, a philosopher. His fame was built upon his conspicuous service in government offices and his scholarly and illuminating contributions to the discussion of some of the most profound problems of human life.

Balfour of Ancient Lineage

Reference to a British "Who's Who" discloses the less generally known facts that he was an enthusiastic golfer and tennis player, and at one time president of the English Cyclists' association.

And Balfour was a Cecil.

In Great Britain that meant much. Here it meant little, and one of the difficult things for us to understand was that Balfour, scion of an ancient and aristocratic British family, nephew of Lord Salisbury and uncle of Lord Hugh and Robert Cecil, came to us as plain Arthur James Balfour, Esq., or Mr. A. J. Balfour, whereas Alfred Harmsworth, who began life without influence or wealth, came to us as Lord Northcliffe.

I was prepared for the arrival of the British high commissioners by a visit from Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, who had been chosen by me to go to Halifax as naval member of the committee on welcome.

He called at my home on Sunday morning after leaving the distinguished guests of America comfortably established in the capital, and that afternoon the whole city turned out to make a gala day of its welcome.

"Religion in War"

Sundays in wartime were apt to be quite unlike the Sundays with which a pious training had made us familiar in days of peace. I found during the war that except for the church hour, it was imperative to vary from the long established custom of not working on the seventh day. Indeed, in planning, as well as in fighting in the world war, as in most wars, history shows that the quiet of the Sabbath has seemed conducive to important conferences and bloody battles. Why is this? I pass the query on, having no answer except that in a war for humanity, bottomed upon Christian principles, I believe that the ox-in-the-ditch principle, rather than strict exclusion of all save church worship, is religion in war.

Admiral Fletcher in that Sunday morning conversation reported to me his impression of the members of the mission. He said Mr. Balfour and Admiral de Chair—the latter the naval member of the British mission talked freely, but seemed to be deeply serious, if not depressed, by the gravity of the situation. They expressed confidence of ultimate victory for the allies, but regarded the German submarine warfare as most dangerous, and thought there would be a terrible, and probably, a long struggle before victory. Admiral Fletcher and Admiral de Chair were old acquaintances and there had been no reserve between them.

Balfour in Double Character

And so with the background furnished by the admiral's report, I went presently to meet these men who had come to extend to us the hand of comradeship in the great fight for civilization.

Of course Mr. Balfour, as I have said, was the outstanding figure. In the second year of the war he was the first lord of the admiralty. He had been blamed for giving Jellicoe the high sea command. He had been praised for many successes of the British navy. Was he Balfour, the great philosopher, or was he, as some of the Irish call him, "bloody Balfour"? Was he a real Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde?

If you had met him as I did on the Monday after his arrival and been privileged to be his dinner partner at the white house, you could never suppose he was other than the rather aloof scholar and philosopher. He looked the student, not the administrator, certainly not a man with whom "bloody" could be associated. He had a calm, rather majestic bearing, but you felt that he could not harm a fly.

Balfour impressed me by his reserve power. He always seemed to be telling you only a little of what he knew. You felt his largeness of knowledge, his breadth of judgment, his clarity and his charity. He had learned so much he could not be dogmatic. It was hard to tell whether you liked him best when he was talking or when he was listening. There was a certain charm in his drawing you out that made you feel at once that he was deeply interested in what you were saying; but when he was answering your inquiries his fund of information was so ready and accurate that you understood his place of primacy when world leaders discussed big problems with him. Conditions in Egypt or India or Mesopotamia were as familiar to him as those in his own neighborhood.

Balfour Not an Optimist

Of course I talked to him mostly about the navy and naval operations and naval policies in the war. He had so recently directed the British navy that his knowledge was full and interesting. Like most Englishmen with whom I talked during the war, Mr. Balfour was frankly grave. He irradiated none of the optimism which fairly dazzles one when Lloyd George talks. He did not look glad or joyous.

I am writing of him now as he appeared in those dark days after years of difficult and baffling warfare. His tall form was bent as if with the burdens of the world. Every part of his face and body told of the weight of responsibilities upon him. But there was a lit in his eye when he smiled that made you wish you could have known him when war's alarms did not make gravity sit like a master upon his spirits.

A short time before he arrived I heard a story which I never doubted after talking with Mr. Balfour. The story was that an American journalist visiting London desired for his paper above all things an interview with Mr. Balfour, and framed some leading questions he wished to ask. At length an appointment was obtained with this condition: "At the end of fifteen minutes your audience must terminate."

Worth Losing "Scoop"

As he was presented to Mr. Balfour the editor thought to be agreeable by speaking of the deep interest with which he had read Mr. Balfour's work on "Philosophy" or "The Future Life." I've forgotten which. It was a fatal error, for, once launched upon his favorite topic, Mr. Balfour did not pause for fifteen minutes. At the end of that time the American journalist was shown out. Not one of his questions had been even asked, he had lost his "scoop" interview, and was bemoaning his blunder of paying a compliment before proceeding to business. But afterwards, telling the incident to a friend, the American said: "It was worth losing the story to hear a real philosopher discuss great, immoral questions in the most immoral way. He seemed to rise from the plains to the heights and to carry you into a new world of speculation and thought and faith which you did not believe any man had fathomed."

And that explains Mr. Balfour and is the secret of the good impression he made in Washington. He discussed international diplomacy, war and books with President Wilson, and they both spoke the same language. He discussed finance and loans with Mr. McAdoo and obtained a loan of $200,000,000 for his country—the first loan any associated nation obtained from our government. He discussed shipping with the members of the shipping board, munition with the secretary of war; and with the secretary of the navy he discussed naval co-operations and intention to detect submarines. He was at home with the parliamentary leaders of the house and senate.

Relies on Experts

I observed one thing about him and the job he had come to do, which showed British thoroughness. He was the head of the mission and debated big problems and talked about whatever was uppermost. But he relied on Gen. Tom Bridges (a fine soldier and a fine man he is) to carry on the negotiations with the war department; upon Admiral de Chair in the Navy department; Lord Cunliffe, governor of the Bank of England, with the treasury department; Lord Percy on blockade and export questions; Mr. Anderson on wheat and food supplies; Maj. Puckle on transports; Mr. Layton on munitions, and so on—an expert on every matter that might arise was at his elbow. And those experts were more than experts. They were masters in their line, competent to confer and conclude with the officials here who were charged with like duties by the American government.

Mr. Balfour never lost sight of the one big thing he came for, he never forgot the interest of his country, but he left to his able associates the carrying out of many details and amazingly big transactions which full co-operation required.

Northcliffe Blows In

And after Balfour came Northcliffe. The great British journalist arrived on June 11, or rather I should say blew in. It was to enter a room already occupied by Balfour and Northcliffe, if there was a quiet fire burning and some books on philosophy or statecraft were on the table, you would feel it was Balfour's home. But if it was Northcliffe's home you would expect to see a typewriter pounding a late "scoop" and books here and there showing that their contents were employed to give them as extracts to the world rather than for personal enjoyment.

In other words, Balfour looks like a dreamer. Northcliffe looks like a man of action. The truth is they are both dreamers and they have both had large parts in translating their dreams into world progress.

When Balfour arrived the quiet hours for discussion and entertainment seemed fitting. When Northcliffe came over he said with a business-like finality. "I am not here to talk. I am engaged in the task of organization, which precludes my accepting this country's offers of hospitality which have poured in on me since my arrival. I hope together new ideas for transmission to England and I shall be glad to answer any question bearing upon the lessons to be learned from any mistakes Great Britain and her allies have made since the time when they were so unexpectedly plunged into this horrible carnage." In other words, in journalistic language, it was time to go to press, and discussion and its amenities must wait until the paper is printed. Then—who was more delightful company than the remarkable British editor!

Contrast the above up-to-date utterance with what the philosophical Mr. Balfour said upon his arrival: "On behalf of my countrymen, let me express our gratitude for all that the citizens of the United States of America have done, to mitigate the lot of those who in the allied countries have suffered from the cruelties of the most righteous cause, is an event wars." And again, "That this great people should have thrown themselves wholeheartedly into this mighty struggle, prepared for all the efforts and sacrifices that may be required to win success for this most righteous cause, in an event at once so happy and so momentous that only the historian of the future will be able, as I believe, to measure its true proportions."

Great Britain sent other great men to hold other conferences, so that our team work would be perfect but Balfour and Northcliffe came in the first days of our entrance into the war; they brought us the inside truths of a serious situation and their counsel was then and will always be regarded as of great value to the closest unity by the two English speaking nations.

Bundle of Energy

I found Lord Northcliffe a bundle of energy and a personage of great ability. He fairly oozed vitality and information on any topic that might come up. Some people associate energy with quick action, behind which is lacking thoroughness of preparation and large knowledge. The career of Northcliffe refutes this popular misconception. His large grasp of the great problems enabled him to co-ordinate British efforts here in a way greatly to facilitate the supplies to the armies and the civilian population. As a fellow journalist it was a happiness to come in such close touch as to appraise at its full value the big service he rendered here, as well as in his own country, and in Europe, to a cause which called forth in the highest degree his remarkable resources and initiative.

FEED FOR BEEF PRODUCTION

Three-Year Experiment Shows That It Costs More to Feed Calves Than Older Cattle.

Results of a three-year-old experiment with calves, yearlings and two-year-olds to study the influence of age on the economy and profit of feeding for beef production indicated that the initial cost per hundred pounds of meat produced was greater with the calves than with the older cattle; that the length of time necessary for finishing steers decreased with age; that the rate and the cost of gain and the proportion of roughage to concentrates consumed increased with age; and that the amount of gain necessary in finishing cattle of equal condition decreased as their age increased. The difference in total quantity of feed necessary for finishing cattle of different ages and fed to the same marketable finish was negligible.

The experienced farmer who feeds cattle should handle older cattle in preference to calves, while the farmer who produces and finishes his own cattle may find calves more profitable. While this is regarded as the best practice under ordinary circumstances, there are advantages, especially at this time in feeding younger cattle, the principal ones being the obtaining of a higher market price for the finished steer, if of good breeding, and an opportunity to hold for a longer period of time when fattened with less loss than the more mature steer.

GIVE HOGS' FEET ATTENTION

Bad Underpinning Are Often Due to Lack of Trimming as Well as to Overfeeding.

When the new breeder is getting ready to exhibit his hogs at the county and state fairs he should pay attention to the feet of the animals as well as to fitting them. If the animals are overfed, very often they have a tendency to go down in the feet. Bad feet are also often due to lack of attention as well as to overfeeding and poor breeding. Animals that are not given an opportunity to take a proper amount of exercise on hard ground are apt to show this trouble more than those under ordinary conditions. In trimming the toes the pig is thrown on its side and with a sharp jackknife the ends of the toes can be pared off. Occasionally the sole of the foot may need paring also, so that the pig will walk flat on the foot. Care should be taken to smooth up the job and to not cut the foot too deeply, so as to bleed and cause lameness. The trimming should be done at least ten days or two weeks before the show.

BEEF PRODUCTION FALLS OFF

Nearly Half of Farmers Last Year Operated at Loss—Similar Conditions This Year.

Beef in the United States was last year produced at an average cost of 14 to 15 cents, according to figures furnished by H. C. Taylor, chief of farm management of the United States department of agriculture.

However, only 58 per cent of the cattle concerned were produced for that and 42 per cent cost more. Fifty-six per cent of the producers kept these costs at 15 cents or less, so that nearly half of the farmers produced beef operated at a loss. 1920 figures indicate that a similar condition exists and that production is falling off considerably as a result, since no one likes to produce at a loss.

Feeding prices and land values are given as the reason for the falling off of the profit. As a remedy for it Mr. Taylor suggests keeping of better records of all farm accounts, elimination of excessive marketing charges and good management.

SCREENINGS NOT POISONOUS

As Feed Substitute for Bran Can Be Fed to Sheep With Much Advantage.

According to a recent report of the U. S. department of agriculture, sweet clover seed screenings are not poisonous to live stock. They can be fed to sheep to advantage, being a good grain feed, but they probably are not so good as bran. However, as bran is a marketable product and sweet clover screenings are not, being an otherwise waste product of the farm, as a feed substitute for bran it constitutes a net saving of the cost of bran and is therefore of considerable value to the producer who can use it.

ISLAND JOB IS SOUGHT BY TWO

GILBERT AND WALDO WILLING TO BE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF PHILIPPINES.

POSITION IS NO SINECURE

Man Who Holds It, Besides His Official Work, Must Entertain Many Visitors From All Parts of the World.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

Washington.—Whoever it is that President Harding appoints as governor general of the Philippines will have a double duty on his hands after he gets there, that of doing his official work and that of acting as host for visitors of note from all parts of the world, including his own beloved country of America.

There are two men who are perfectly willing to go to the Philippines as governor general, and of course there are many more who are willing, but these two have been most prominently mentioned. One is Newton W. Gilbert, former representative in congress from Angola, Ind., and the other is Col. Rhinelander Waldo, formerly police commissioner of New York city, who formed what was known as the Harding Democratic league for the promotion of the election of the present President of the United States.

If Gen. Leonard Wood had desired the position of governor general of the Philippines, he could have had it, or at least it is generally so understood in Washington. The general, however, is now touring the Philippines and preparing a report on conditions there which he will turn in to the War department on his return. It will be used for the information, and guidance, perhaps, of the new governor general when he is appointed.

Traveling with General Wood and acting as his chief assistant is W. Cameron Forbes, who at one time was governor general of the Philippines. It is understood that Mr. Forbes, who has large business interests in the United States, is not a candidate for reappointment, but of course it is possible that if there is insistence on the part of the administration, he may change his mind and take the job.

Like Viceroy of India.

Now, in a way, the governor general of the Philippines has an official position like that which is held by the viceroy of India, for the chief official of the Philippines represents the President in the islands, although by no stretch of the imagination can he be called the vice president. The place which the governor general holds as the representative of the American government necessitates his doing an immense amount of entertaining, and the wife of the man who goes to the islands as governor general has her hands full, and her house full a good deal of the time, in her capacity of hostess.

In the old days of the Spanish rule the representative of the king of Spain had duties similar to those of the viceroy of India. He held what was almost a court in the islands, and the Filipinos came to regard the Spanish official as a little king by himself. When entertainments were given in Manila in those days, court etiquette prevailed, and it has been somewhat difficult for some of the Filipinos, in these days of the rule of democracy in the islands, to get over the old thoughts concerning the "court."

Must Entertain Many.

Congressional parties visit the Philippines almost every year. The governor general and his wife, if they want to continue in the islands and know which side their bread is buttered on, entertain the representatives as well as they know how. Representatives of the monarchies of the world frequently go to Manila on short sight-seeing visits. It is the duty of the governor general and his wife to entertain them. Moreover, it is their official duty to give on various occasions receptions for the chief Filipino officials, and then there are also certain public receptions which must be given.

The governor general of the Philippines, like the viceroy of India, has two residences. He must have them if he wants to keep his health. The chief residence is in the city of Manila, while the other is at the end of the Benguet road, which leads up into the mountains. The governor general's household goes to the mountains in the extremely hot weather.

This Benguet road, by the way, has a history. Its construction was a difficult engineering problem. An infantry officer of the army, Maj. L. W. Kennon, was detailed for the engineering work. The men inhabitants of a province which he had governed volunteered to go to the scene of operations to work for the man they liked. They did it, and the road was completed on time. Major Kennon during the great war was a brigadier general, and in the absence of Major General Barry was in command at Camp Grant, Ill. He died only recently.

American Adviser for Japan.

The Japanese government recently, through its ambassador to the United States, Baron Shidehara, has issued statements explanatory of its attitude toward certain international problems in which the United States is interested. The Japanese evidently have roused themselves to the knowledge that they do not understand thoroughly the viewpoint of the people of the United States concerning some of the problems which contain possible elements of trouble.

It is apparent that the recent statement concerning the Anglo-Japanese alliance and the attitude of the emperor's government toward the United States, and its intentions toward and in China, is intended to clear up some misunderstandings.

The Japanese authorities have just secured the services of an American, Frederick Moore of New York city, as one of their counsellors in foreign affairs. In plain English, it is probable that Mr. Moore should be known as the American adviser of the Japanese government on matters pertaining to its relations with the United States. Mr. Moore has just entered upon his duties. Specifically his title is "foreign counsellor to the ministry of foreign affairs." He will leave for Tokyo shortly.

By securing the services of an American, a man familiar through long association with affairs East and West, and, moreover, an American of unchallenged patriotism, the Japanese government seemingly believes it will be able to understand more clearly and thoroughly the viewpoint on matters pertaining to the Orient. In truth, it seems that the Japanese, unable always themselves to interpret the sentiment and feelings of Americans, have decided "to let an American tell them."

Moore's Interesting Career.

Frederick Moore has had a more than merely interesting career. For a good many years he was correspondent of the Associated Press in China and in other parts of the Far East, serving for some time in Japan. While having served in many parts of the world, Moore has remained steadfastly an American. He knows his country's viewpoint, and my fixed belief is, for I know Moore well, that he may be able in his new position to serve the ends of real statesmanship, which means, of course, the maintenance of good relations when the lack of an interpreter of the right spirit and intention might make for misunderstandings and, perhaps, for sharp trouble.

In 1909 Mr. Moore was in Constantinople as a newspaper correspondent. The young Turks took the city, and everybody who might be considered a noncombatant went under cover. Moore, however, believing it to be his duty to his newspaper and to his profession to be where things were moving, went to a post of dangerous duty in the streets, and while there was shot and badly wounded.

Woman Coming into Her Own.

If Governor Snell of Illinois appoints Mrs. Huck, the daughter of the late William E. Mason, to succeed her father as a representative in congress to fill out the unexpired term, the lower house will have two women representatives, the other being Miss Alice M. Robertson of Oklahoma. Woman gradually is coming into her own in the official life of the capital of the United States.

There have been men to say from the very beginning of things legislative that woman has been the real moving spirit in governmental acts, for the mother and the wife, to say nothing of the sister, always have had their controlling or near controlling influence over the men folk.

It may be that if the welfare department of the government is established, a woman will sit in the cabinet of the United States. The next step is a woman president. Will the step ever be taken? The present writer is not going to be foolish enough to attempt to answer the question. Things may happen, and contentment remains in letting them happen if they are going to, and to accept doubtfully, philosophically or reluctantly, as the case may be, the outcome.

Women in the District.

Woman always has had a marked influence in the government of the District of Columbia, the geography of which is coincident with that of the capital. Congress governs the district, but to a considerable measure it governs it as the women of the district say it shall be governed, although nobody in this more or less detectable district having a vote, congress is frequently made bold enough by the voteless circumstances in the case to ignore the legislative wishes of the inhabitants of the capital, whether they be male or female.

When the women descend, however, upon the committees of congress, something usually happens in an affirmative or a negative way, the affirmative or the negative result depending upon which side of the question the women have taken. They have a way with them, and generally get the legislation they want.

Washington is a city of clubs. It is the only large city in the United States, probably, where the women's clubs greatly outnumber the men's clubs. There are all sorts of organizations of women in this town, social, philanthropic, semi-political and civic. The Congressional Club of Women is one of the largest organizations in the town. Its membership is made up of the wives, mothers, sisters and daughters of men who are either cabinet members or members of one or the other of the two houses of congress. The women members of the families of the President and the vice president also, of course, are eligible to membership.

CALIFORNIA WARNS POOR CONSUMPTIVES

The folly of impecunious consumptives going to California is brought out in the New York Medical Journal.

"If travelling for health, take notice: Tuberculosis demands rest, food, fresh air and peace of mind. This may not mean a change of climate. California has no public institutions with free care for non-residents. With funds to live for a year, come, but do not rely on finding 'light work for support.' The State Board of Health warns you, because it wishes to spare you homesickness and suffering from financial strain."

On which the Medical Journal comments:

"Fresh air is free—that is all: and not always that when the impecunious man has to take a lodging in some shut-in lodging house and spend most of his time owing to lack of help in ascending stairs or getting on the porch, or getting food served upstairs when the cough has racked him all night."

"Landladies generally refuse such applicants, and, as the State Board of Health says, light work is hard to obtain. They are quite right, but it seems as if the rich who can afford the necessary adjuncts and do benefit, might perhaps donate a little for the betterment of the other man."

TOO MANY BLACK BEARS NOW IN POTTER COUNTY

Lock Haven, Pa., July 13.—Potters county has so many black bears that the state game commission has ordered their capture and shipment to Westmoreland county, where the animals are scarce.

The first of the bears captured weighed 275 pounds. It was caught in a trap at Hulls and was crated and brought here in an automobile. The animal was liberated near Ligonier a few days ago and was in good condition.

Gamekeeper Harry Van Cleave said many bears would be sent to the western county and a few to Bedford County.

CONGRESS' ACTION SCORED BY LODGE

Members of the Alexander commandery No. 46, P. O. S. of A., at meeting held in the lodge room Saturday evening, passed a resolution branding as a disgrace to the nation the action of congress in recommitting the soldiers' bonus bill in view of the fact that this country has loaned billions to foreign nations and sent additional millions to the relief of Europe.

The result follows: Whereas, Congress has voted to recommit the soldier's compensation bill, which indicates clearly the intention to pigeon-hole or delay action indefinitely showing clearly the lack of interest on the part of a majority of congress, now that the war has been won and their own personal safety is assured and

Whereas, Had the war continued but a few months billions of dollars would have been needed and would have been forthcoming, but now since the danger is past as a result, solely of the indomitable courage and a desire to make the world safe for democracy, on the part of the American soldiers, congress pleads helplessness, and cannot suggest a plan whereby the necessary funds can be raised and

Whereas, We believe the delay is a disgrace to the nation, a nation that has raised millions for the relief of foreigners in foreign countries, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Alexander Commandery No. 46, P. O. S. of A., in session assembled bitterly denounce the present attitude of congress and the president toward the ex-soldiers of the World War and pledge our most strenuous effort in behalf of the soldiers, and to oppose for re-election to office all those who are in any way parties to the present dilatory tactics, which we believe are more political than patriotic.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted at an adjourned session of Alexander commandery No. 46, P. O. S. of A., held July 16, 1921.

JUDGE BAILEY DECIDES LOCAL SCHOOL QUESTION

S. 366, 376; Dillon on Municipal Corporation 5th. Ed. Vol. 1 346. This principle of law announced in the foregoing cases, and as to which we find no contradictory opinion anywhere, is thus put in Ruling Case Law, Vol. 19, page 987: "It sometime happens that there are two governmental bodies exercising different public functions within precisely the same boundaries, as when the boundaries of a city are coincident with those of a county, or of a school district. In such cases if each body is a distinct and independent corporation; its indebtedness should be reckoned separately, but if one of the bodies is not a separate corporation but merely a board or department of the other its indebtedness must be included as part of the indebtedness referred to no case in Pennsylvania where this question has been squarely decided and by diligent search we have been unable to find any."

McGuire vs. Philadelphia 245 Pa., page 287, 294, cited by the learned council for the plaintiff is not authority for their position. In that case part of the debt assumed by the school district, after the passage of the Act of May 18, 1911, P. L. 809, still remained an obligation of the city. The general indebtedness of that municipality was not reduced by the Act of 1911. While the school district had agreed to pay this debt, it still remained part of the financial obligations of Philadelphia.

In Long vs. Cheltenham Twp. Sch. D. 269 Pa., 472, no more was decided than that the word "municipality" as used in Sec. 15 Art. 9, of the Constitution, when taken in connection with its context, was not intended to include a school district. We are unable to see that it is in point upon the question to be determined in the instant case.

From these considerations we conclude that the injunction must be refused and the bill dismissed, and we, therefore, arrive at the following findings of fact and conclusions of law.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

1. That John C. Lyon, the plaintiff, is a resident, qualified voter and tax payer of the Borough of Bedford and bring this action for the benefit of himself and other citizens and tax payers of said Borough.

2. That Dr. H. B. Strook, S. W. Rouzer, Dr. H. R. Brightbill and Chas. E. Koontz are duly elected and qualified School Directors of the School District of Bedford Borough.

3. That the School Board of the School District of Bedford Borough at the regular meeting on the 24th day of March, 1921, adopted a resolution expressing a desire to increase the indebtedness of the School District aforesaid to an amount not exceeding $50,000.00 for the purpose of the erection of a new high school building and that the president and secretary of the Board were authorized and empowered to give the notice required by law for an election to secure the assent of the qualified electors of the Borough of Bedford to an increase of the indebtedness of the said School District not exceeding the sum of $50,000.00 for the erection of a high school building aforesaid.

4. That by the authority of the resolution mentioned in the third finding of fact the president and secretary of the school board entered into a contract for the publication of the notices for an election for or against the increase of indebtedness mentioned in the third request for findings of fact.

5. That the total assessed valuation for the year 1921 is the basis upon which computation of the indebtedness of said borough is to be calculated and that the total assessed valuation for the Borough of Bedford which is co-extensive with the school district of the borough of Bedford is $860,159.00.

6. That the net indebtedness of the school district of Bedford Borough is $7500.00.

7. That the net indebtedness of the Borough of Bedford for its water system and borough purposes is $47,700.00.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

1. The school district of the Borough of Bedford stands, with relation to its borrowing capacity, in exactly the same category as municipalities within the State of Pennsylvania and in calculating its borrowing power, its debt and the debt of the municipality of the Borough of Bedford, territorially coincident with it are to be taken distributively and not collectively.

2. The school directors of the school district of the Borough of Bedford have a legal right to proceed to an election by the electors of the Borough of Bedford to determine whether or not the indebtedness of the district should be increased by an amount not exceeding $50,000.00 for the erection of a high school building.

3. The cost of advertising and holding an election for the purpose hereinbefore designated is a proper expense.

4. A perpetual injunction must be refused.

HOW TO KEEP SAFE IN A THUNDERSTORM

Here are some instructions as to what to do and what not to do in a thunderstorm. They are issued by the State Fire Marshall of Louisiana and quoted with approval by Safety Engineering (New York):

If you find yourself indoors during a thunderstorm, don't go near the stove, and avoid using the telephone; also, don't touch a screen door.

Out of doors during a thunderstorm the safest place is in the woods. Lightning may strike a tree, but it is not likely to be the one under which you have taken shelter. On the other hand the most foolish thing you can do is to stand beneath an isolated tree. An open shed, especially if it is some distance from larger buildings, is nearly if not quite as dangerous.

Never go near a wire fence during a thunderstorm. Nine-tenths of the annual mortality from lightning occurs in the rural districts, including under this head towns and villages of 2,500 inhabitants or less.
